At first, the nose in the 2013 Taurasi Fatica Contadina is dark and rich, showing alluring florals, tobacco, and black cherry; yet with time, hints of spiced citrus and rosemary add an airy lift. On the palate, velvety textures are contrasted by cool-toned minerality, as a cascade of citrus-infused black fruits flow across the senses. The finish is long and angular, with grippy tannins wrestling brisk acids, as tart black fruits and dark inner florals slowly dissipate. The 2013 Fatica Contadina has its moments in the glass, particularly on the bouquet, yet it loses my attention a bit with its monolithic expression on the palate.
